Filippo Battistoni

is senior lecturer in Greek history at the Department of Civilizations and Forms of Knowledge, University of Pisa. His main research interests concern the cultural and social history of the Greco-Roman world.

Stéphane Benoist

is a professor in Roman History at the University of Lille, HALMA (History, Archaeology, Literature of Ancient Worlds – UMR 8164, Univ. Lille, CNRS, French Ministry of Culture). His main subjects of research are the Roman imperial power and its representations from the 1st century BCE to the 4th and the beginning of the 5th century CE, the notion of political and social identities, time and space in the city of Rome, imperial epigraphy (titulatures, erased inscriptions), and in the perspective of his present research program ‘Politics in Ancient Rome: thought, practices and representations from the 2nd c. BCE to the 4th c. CE’, the political philosophy and ideology (imperial discourse, Stoicism).

Agnès Bérenger

is professor of Roman history at the University Paul-Valéry Montpellier 3 and member of the EA 4424 – CRISES and of the LabEx ARCHIMEDE, within which she coordinates the Axis 2 Powers. Her research focuses on the political and administrative history of the Roman Empire, as well as on the relations between centre and periphery in the Roman world. She has published Le métier de gouverneur dans l'empire romain, de César à Dioclétien, Paris, de Boccard, 2014, and is currently preparing a historical commentary on book V of Herodian's History.

Caroline Blonce

is senior lecturer of Roman History and member of HisTeMé (EA 7455) at the University of Caen Normandie. Her main fields of research are Roman epigraphy, urbanism and political history of the Roman Empire.

Domitilla Campanile

is professor of Roman History at the University of Pisa. Campanile's main research areas include the Republican political history, the economic and social history of Asia Minor, religion of Asia Minor, the imperial cult, the cultural life during the Early Empire, the reception of classics in contemporary culture.

Anne Daguet-Gagey

is professor of Roman History at Artois University (Arras) and member of the CREHS-UR 4027. Her research focuses on the political and administrative history of Rome and of the Roman Empire. She is involved in several research programmes: the Victims of the Abolitio Memoriae (VAM), the Augustan senatorial Fasti and the Equestrian Procurators.

Ségolène Demougin

is emeritus research director CNRS and research director at the Section of Historical and Philological Sciences (SHP), École des Hautes Études (EPHE, Paris). Expert in Roman epigraphy, she has published widely on the social, institutional and political history of the Late Republic and Roman Empire, especially on the equestrian order.

Henri Fernoux

is professor of Greek History and member of the LAHM-CReAAH, UMR 6566 at the University of Rennes. His main field of research is the political and cultural history of the Greek cities in the Hellenistic and the Roman Age.

Gabrielle Frija

is a senior lecturer of Roman History and member of the laboratory ACP (Analyse comparée des pouvoirs, EA 3350) at the Université Gustave Eiffel. Her main field of research is the history of the Greek city in the Roman empire, from a religious, cultural and political point of view.

Anne Gangloff

is senior lecturer of Roman History and director of the CReAAH Rennes 2-LAHM at the University of Rennes. She has published monographs and many articles on imperial Hellenism and on the cultural and political history of the Roman Empire, including Pouvoir impérial et vertus philosophiques : l'évolution de la figure du bon prince sous le Haut-Empire (Brill, 2018). She is leading a research project focusing on heroisation (Jean Monnet Chair FABER).

Matthias Haake

is privatdozent in Ancient History at the University of Münster. He holds a Heisenberg position, funded by the German Research Council (DFG), at the University of Bonn and is currently substitute professor in Ancient History at the University of Tübingen. His main fields of research are the political culture of ancient monarchies from the Archaic Age to Late Antiquity and the cultural and social history of philosophy in the ancient Mediterranean world.

Anna Heller

is professor of Ancient History at the University of Tours. Her main interest lies in the social and institutional history of the Greek city under Roman rule, as it emerges from the epigraphical evidence from Asia Minor. She is also interested in quantitative methods applied to historical sources.

Christine Hoët-van Cauwenberghe is senior lecturer of Ancient History and member of the HALMA, UMR 8164 (Univ. Lille, CNRS, MC) at the University of Lille. Her main fields of research are political et social history at the end of Roman Republic and Roman Empire.
