This collection of essays emerges from an AHRC Leadership Fellowship, Business News in the Atlantic World, 1620–1763, held by Dr Siobhan Talbott from 2018-2022 (reference AH/P009034/1). Dr Sophie H. Jones was the project's Postdoctoral Research Associate. A symposium was held at Keele University in September 2019 which brought together scholars from a number of disciplines interested in the categorisation, creation, and dissemination of 'business news' in the early modern Atlantic world. This volume, which arises from contributions to this event in addition to commissioned chapters, offers perspectives on the ways in which information was produced and used by business agents in the early modern Atlantic world. The editors would like to thank all of the speakers at the symposium (including those not represented here) for their contributions to that event. We are particularly grateful to the AHRC and to Keele University for funding and hosting the symposium, and Siobhan is indebted to Sophie for her organisation of the event, as well as for her work in managing the administration of this collection. We are grateful to Professor Andrew Pettegree and to the team at Brill for their encouragement and assistance in developing this volume for publication, and would like to thank all archives and repositories who granted permission to use their images. Finally, we thank all of our contributors for their hard work in meeting our deadlines, in responding to our many queries, and for helping us both to develop our own understandings of 'business news'.

Notes on Contributors

David Brown

graduated with a BA in History from Trinity College Dublin in 1987. After a career in the Irish tech sector he returned to TCD to work on The Down Survey of Ireland project (2011–2013), and completed a PhD exploring networks of early modern English and Irish Atlantic merchants (2016). His monograph Empire and Enterprise: Money, Power and the Adventurers for Irish land during the British Civil Wars was published in 2020, and he is co-editor, with Professor Micheál Ó'Siochrú, of a five-volume critical edition of The Books of Survey and Distribution (Irish Manuscripts Commission, 2016–18). He is Archival Discovery Lead for Beyond 2022, a project digitally recreating the Public Record Office of Ireland, which was destroyed during the outbreak of the Irish Civil War in 1922.

Peter Buckles

finished his PhD at the University of Liverpool in 2021 with the support of an ESRC studentship and published his first article on historical social network analysis with Enterprise & Society the following year. His debut monograph, Crisis and Resilience in the Bristol-West India Sugar Trade, 1783–1802, published with Liverpool University Press, offers a close analysis of the British trade in sugar during wartime. Peter's key research interests include business and economic history and the use of digital tools to answer historical questions. He is especially interested in how businesses navigate periods of crisis and overcome uncertainty.

Eilish Gregory

is the Little Company of Mary Fellow in the Department of Theology and Religion at Durham University. She was awarded her PhD at University College London in 2017. Gregory previously held associate lecturer posts at University of Reading, Anglia Ruskin University, The Open University, and Oxford University's Department for Continuing Education. She was also Postdoctoral Research Associate at the Royal Historical Society, a researcher for the History of Parliament, and has held library fellowships at the Folger Shakespeare Library, Durham University, Marsh's Library (Dublin), and the University of Aberdeen. Gregory specialises in the impact of Catholic penal laws and inter-confessional networks between Catholics and Protestants. Sarah Hall is a historian of puritanism in the seventeenth-century transatlantic. Her research focuses on puritan communities and the social networks that underpin them. More widely, this informs a fuller picture of the social ties and also the methods taken by puritans to resist fragmentation and preserve cohesion. She is currently Associate Lecturer in Public History at the University of York.

Sophie H. Jones

is a Lecturer in Modern British History at the University of Liverpool. After receiving her PhD from the University of Liverpool in 2018, she has previously held PDRA positions at the University of Liverpool and at Keele University. An historian of the eighteenth-century British Atlantic, Jones has published on a range of topics including early-modern merchant families, eighteenth-century subscription libraries, and early-modern literacy. Her research focuses on the socio-cultural development of the North American colonies, and her first monograph project – Patterns of Loyalism in Revolutionary New York (in preparation for submission to Manchester University Press) – considers how local socio-cultural contexts shaped political identities during the American Revolution.

Jeremy Land

received his PhD from Georgia State University in Atlanta, Georgia in 2019. He is a postdoctoral researcher in Economic History at the University of Gothenburg, Sweden, following postdoctoral positions at the Universities of Helsinki and Jyväskylä in Finland. His research focuses on the economic and business history of the Atlantic World, broadly construed, in the 18th and 19th centuries. He is Meetings Coordinator of the Economic History Association.

Lena Liapi

is an Honorary Research Fellow in History at Keele University and a CREMS Research Associate at the University of York. Her research focuses on the history of the book, of crime, and of cultures of communication. She has published a monograph, titled Roguery in Print: Crime and Culture in Early Modern London (Boydell & Brewer, 2019), as well as other works on print culture and the public sphere. She is particularly interested in the interactions of news media in England and France in the seventeenth century and the ways in which new notions of the 'public' were constructed oppositionally in the two countries.

Kenneth Morgan

is Professor of History in the School of Social and Political Sciences at Brunel University London. He is a Fellow of the Royal Historical Society, and has been a British Academy Research Reader. He has published widely in several fields of History, with the business history of eighteenth-century British merchants (especially those in Bristol and Liverpool) being a longstanding and continuing focal point of his research.

Edmond Smith

(PhD Cambridge, 2016) is a Senior Lecturer in Economic Cultures at the University of Manchester. Their work, which has been supported by grants from the British Academy, the AHRC, and the ESRC, focuses on commercial communities and the institutions of early modern global trade. Smith's notable publications include Merchants: The Community That Shaped England's Trade and Empire (Yale, 2021, winner of the Ralph Gomory Prize), and articles in the Economic History Review, Journal of British Studies, Historical Journal and Journal of World History.

Siobhan Talbott

is Reader in Early Modern History at Keele University. She held postdoctoral research fellowships at the University of Manchester and the Institute of Historical Research (University of London) after receiving her PhD from the University of St Andrews in 2010.
